PREFACE.

HE Excise-laws are become so numerous, and the frequent alterations therein, and many references from one to another, have made them so intricate, that some help is absolutely necessary to those who would acquire a knowledge of them:—For such is the following work designed; wherein I have abstracted and digested them under their proper heads, collected together the several clauses that have any relation to one another, and against each placed the act, chapter, and section, where it may be found in the Statutes at Large, and the page in the small editions printed for the use of the Excise.

At the end of the several articles I have left blank spaces, for the use of those who will take the pains to abstract future laws.

By perufing this abridgement, any one may make himself thoroughly acquainted with the Excise-laws: To the officers of Excise then, it must of course be very useful; for it is well known their duty will not allow them time sufficient to perfect themselves in the knowledge of them without some assistance of this nature.

Ιt

It may not be improper to observe here, that against those acts which are contained in Eyre's Collection, I have put the pages where they are to be found therein: this I was fearful would have been rather an inconvenience to the officers, and was therefore about to page them both to Eyre's and the officer's acts; but as that would have taken up too much room, it was thought most adviseable to page them to Eyre's only: and, indeed, the inconvenience, if any, can be but very trifling; for officers may, if they think it worth while, very easily page them to their own acts, or readily find any particular one without taking that trouble.

The two or three clauses to which there are no pages, are extremely scarce;—few, I believe, are possessed of them: however, those who are, may soon insert in the proper column the pages thereto.

If any one considers the number of acts of parliament from which the following work is abstracted, and the connections many of them have with one another, on account of the alterations that have from time to time been made in them, he will see it must have been a laborious undertaking: but it was more so than he can conceive: however, I had the satisfatisfaction of finding the pains I took to accomplish it well bestowed, as my design met with general approbation.

The reader will, I hope, excuse the desects he may meet with in the course of the work: indeed, as I was first induced to attempt it from the frequent complaints of the want of something of this nature, and encouraged to go through with it from a persuasion that it would prove of public utility, I think I may assure myself he will readily allow me that indulgence, and be glad to see an Abridgment of the Excise Laws make its appearance, though it may not be executed in so complete a manner as if an abler hand had undertaken it.

SUBSCRIBERS.

A FTER gratefully acknowledging the favour those gentlemen have done me, who have encouraged this work by becoming subscribers to it, I must beg leave to acquaint them, that the room which such a number would unavoidably have taken up, obliges me to decline my intentions of prefixing their names to it; and substitute in the stead thereof the sollowing list, which shews only the Number of them.
